

s612 Jean Marie Vianney Makabuza-
Rwanda

Global Enterprise Experience (GEE)
JOURNAL

EXPERIENCE FROM GEE

By the time I enrolled and participated in GEE Competition, I came to realize that a single head can't carry a roof! In today's technological and globalized world, in which business and technology remain top-drivers of every phenomenon, I learnt a lot from my team.

After reading the poster in my University, I got convinced that I must me too, participate in the competition. It was hard battle because the competition had to line up with job full time requirements in which I had to honor full responsibilities as teacher in secondary school, end Semester Exams in which I had to work so hard to pass the exams and most difficult the research paper or Dissertation as an academic requirement for my studies. In addition to those tasks, I had very limited access to internet connectivity. Despite all those, I sacrificed every opportunity I got to communicate to my team on facebook. Most of times I used my mobile phone to chat with them, read comments and ideas of members and share mine. Then I did also try so hard to access internet to send and read pdf documents shared within the group.

The most appreciable experience I got from my team is how a team can share constructive ideas toward a common end. I was not used to facebook team, google documents, dropbox,.. But now I have all experience that I think will help me in the future. In our team, Gayathiri did really work hard to keep us updated and coordinated both in ideas and online. I did appreciated how everyone's idea was valued and respected in writing the report. One thing I noticed the achievement of a team project requires every individual's full effort and dedication to the work.

I personally appreciate GEE team, more particularly Deb, who's very eager-to-help lady. If it weren't her help, reminders and notification I would have really failed to participate and be not been able to be eligible for GEE offers. God bless you Deb! I appreciate the ever effort of our members to participate until the last hour of the deadline.

